He also elucidated the various activities conducted and to be conducted by IIC, KITS Warangal. He motivated the students, how these programs will aid in becoming innovators and then entrepreneurs.

The session was started with introduction of speaker from Dr. Sumanth Kumar, coordinator of the program.

Session on Achieving "Value Proposition Fit" & "Business Fit"

The key points he described are:

There is no practical tool that helps business people map, think through, discuss, test, and pivot their company's value proposition in relation to their customers' needs.

The Value Proposition Canvas is like a plug-in tool to the Business Model Canvas. It helps you design, test, and build your company's Value Proposition to Customers in a more structured and thoughtful way, just like the Canvas assists you in the business model design process.

Companies need to get both right, the "fit" and the business model, if they don't want to go out of business. The tools work best in combination. One does not replace the other.

The Value Proposition Canvas

As mentioned above, the Value Proposition Canvas is composed of two blocks from the Business Model Canvas, the Value Proposition and the corresponding Customer Segment you are targeting. The purpose of the tool is to help you sketch out both in more detail with a simple but powerful structure.

Achieving Fit

The goal of the Value Proposition Canvas is to assist you in designing great Value Propositions that match your Customer's needs and jobs-to-be-done and helps them solve their problems. This is what the start-up scene calls product-market fit or problem-solution fit. The Value Proposition Canvas helps you work towards this fit in a more systematic way.

Customer Jobs

First, let us look at customers more closely by sketching out a customer profile. I want you to look at three things. Start by describing what the customers you are targeting are trying to get done. It could be the tasks they are trying to perform and complete, the problems they are trying to solve, or the needs they are trying to satisfy.

- What functional job is your customer trying get done? (e.g. perform or complete a specific task, solve a specific problem)
- What social jobs is your customer trying to get done? (e.g. trying to look good, gain power or status)
- What emotional jobs is your customer trying get done? (e.g. esthetics, feel good, security)
- What basic needs is your customer trying to satisfy? (e.g. communication, sex)

Customer Pains

Now describe negative emotions, undesired costs and situations, and risks that your customer experiences or could experience before, during, and after getting the job done.

- What does your customer find too costly? (e.g. takes a lot of time, costs too much money, requires substantial efforts)
- What makes your customer feel bad?(e.g. frustrations, annoyances, things that give them a headache)
- How are current solutions underperforming for your customer? (e.g. lack of features, performance, malfunctioning)
- What are the main difficulties and challenges your customer encounters? (e.g. understanding how things work, difficulties getting things done, resistance)

Customer Gains

Now describe the benefits your customer expects, desires, or would be surprised by. This includes functional utility, social gains, positive emotions, and cost savings.

- Which savings would make your customer happy? (e.g. in terms of time, money, and effort)
- What outcomes do your customers expect and what would go beyond his/her expectations? (e.g. quality level, more of something, less of something)
- How do current solutions delight your customer? (e.g. specific features, performance, quality)
- What would make your customer's job or life easier? (e.g. flatten learning curve, more services, lower cost of ownership)
- What positive social consequences does your customer desire? (e.g. makes them look good, increase in power, status)

Competing for Customers

Most Value Propositions compete with others for the same Customer Segment. Thinking of this as an "open slot" that will be filled by the company with the best fit.

Competing Value Propositions

If you sketch out competing value propositions, you can easily compare them by mapping out the same variables (e.g. price, performance, risk, service quality, etc.) on a so-called strategy canvas.

Testing and Pivoting

Using the Value Proposition Canvas as a thinking and design tool is only a start. To get the best out of it, you need to combine it with testing and pivoting.

The speaker covered various aspects of building trends, including innovations in new technology, as well as collaboration among diverse personnel to keep up with changes over time. The speaker also discussed about the world class standards of UltraTech concrete which involves quality Assurance, quality Control & its great standard of manufacturing. Attendees at the session were thrilled to learn about the latest technologies and trends in UltraTech, including new materials and processes, testing process of concrete, emerging sustainability and safety trends, across the globe.

The speaker emphasized the importance of innovation in construction as a means to improve systems and processes, reduce cost overruns, simplify traditional methods, enhance safety standards, increase productivity, optimize resources, achieve the highest standards, and ultimately drive organizational development while providing excellent customer service.

Finally, the event was concluded with the speaker's closing remarks on developing technologies. The participants posed few questions to the speaker and he answered to all of them.
